OBJECTS

UNS (English US), 2026

two intaglio prints & one embossing on mould-made paper

each 26 × 20.5 cm

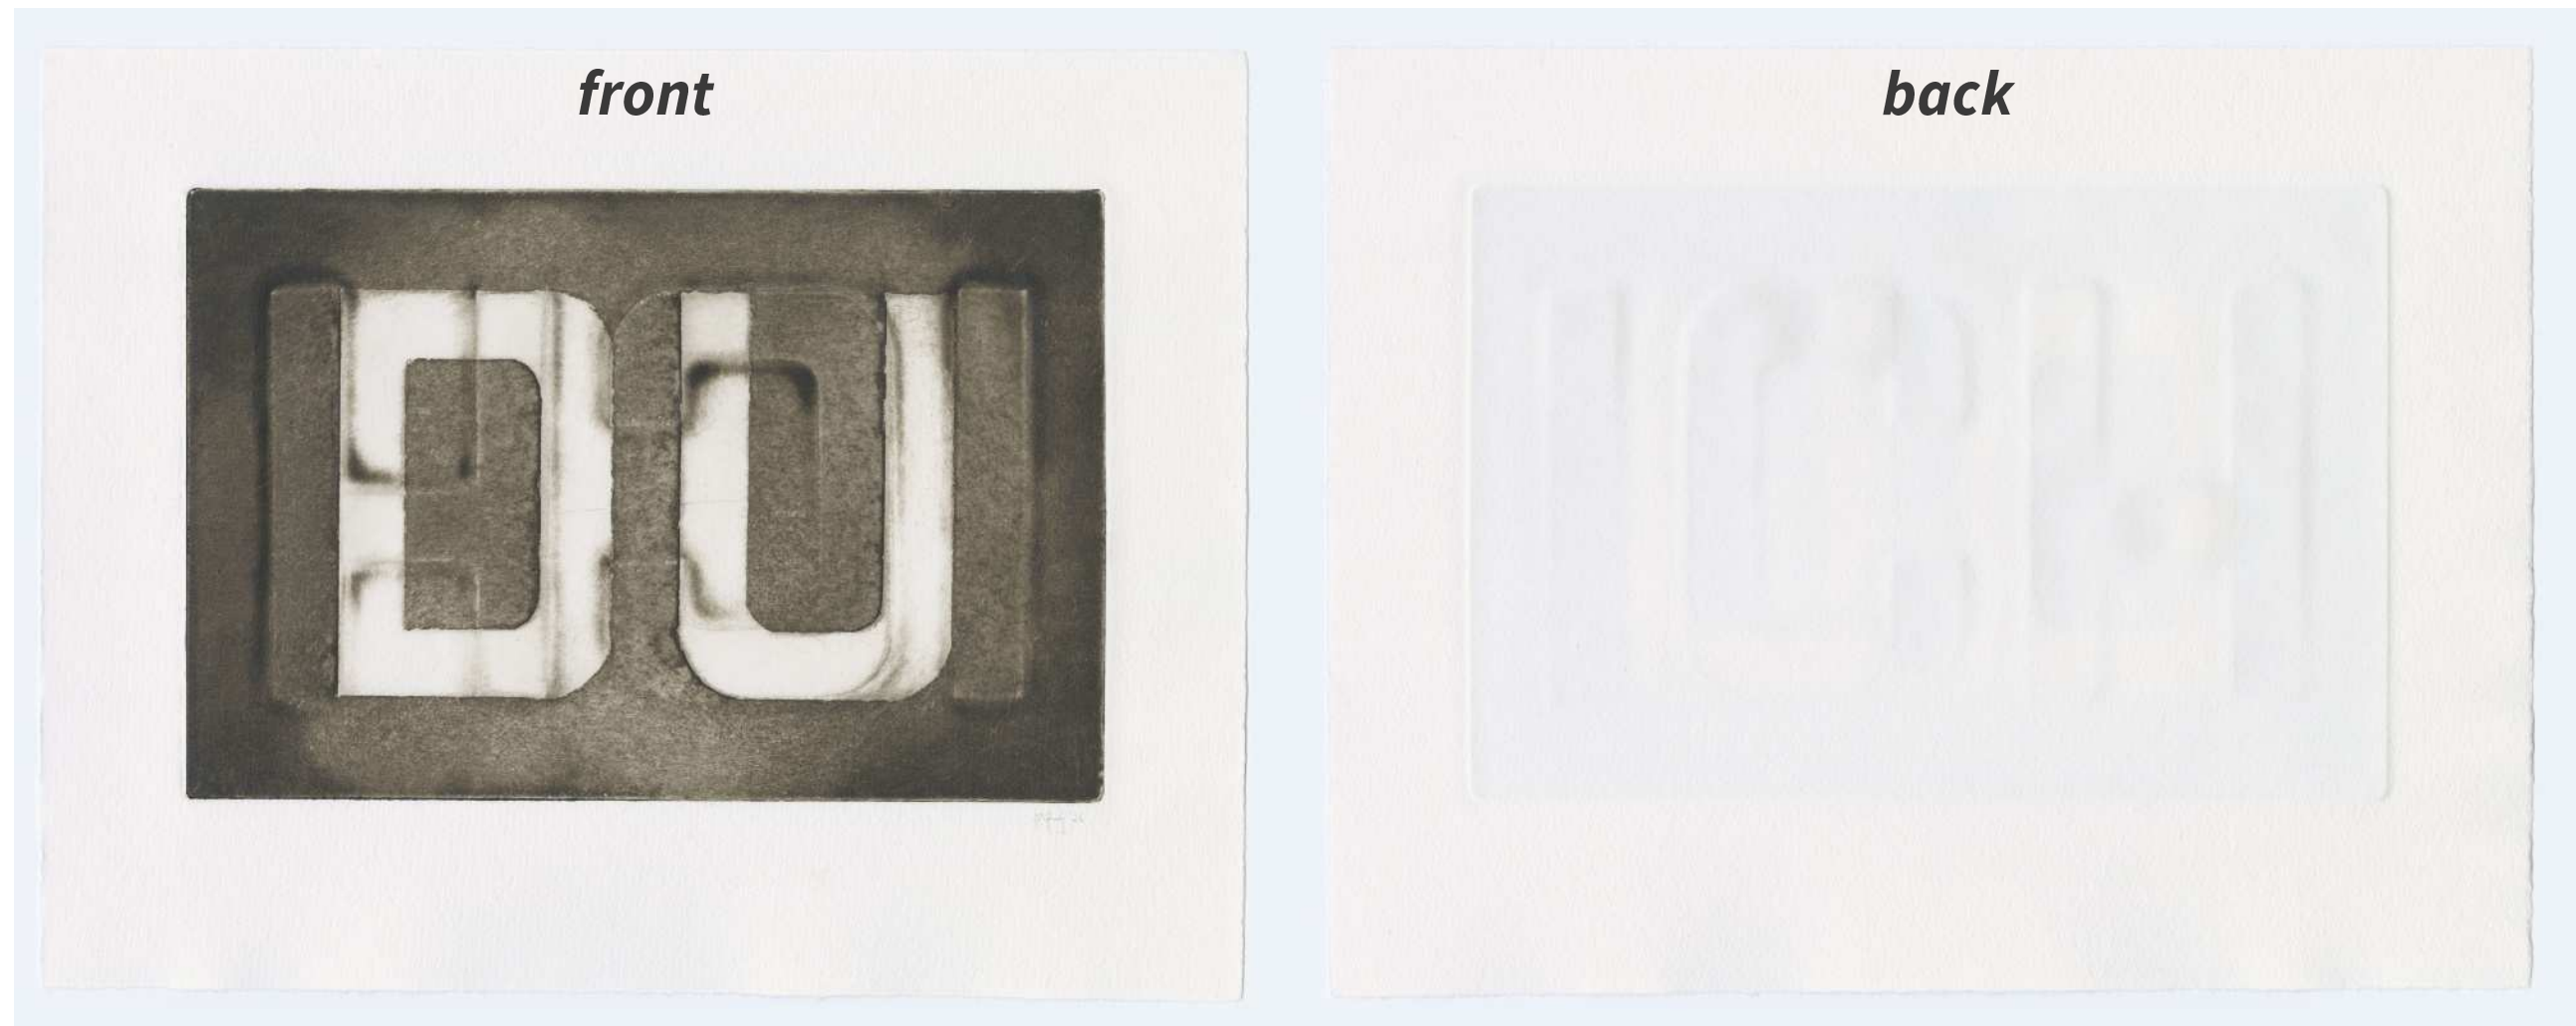

This work comprises three paper objects: two unique intaglio prints with embossing and one pure embossing. Three letters (I C H, English I) were cut out of steel, and two letters (D U, English you) were etched into a copper plate with aquatint. The steel letters and the plate were then layered with paper, stacked upon each other, and printed. Because the plate is deformed with each printing pass, each print is unique.

UNS (English US), 2026

two intaglio prints & one embossing on mould-made paper

each 26 × 20.5 cm

We come to be through encounters, and we are formed by those across from us. A you appears and is pressed upon by an I: they find an each-other in an us.

These paper objects are results of an altered printing process, in which each print is simultaneously an embossing. In this process, steel letters are pushed through a plate, the I (Ich) and you (Du) are pressed together and thusly mutually embossed by each other.

hält (English holds/keeps), 2025

body contact, 3 pieces of photographic paper mounted on Alu Dibond
each 29 x 37 cm

exhibited as part of the group show Oh, for material's sake! for the Rotlicht Festival 2025, Angewandte Expositur Paulusplatz, Vienna, Austria (22. – 29.11.25)

The body meets a surface that captures it, cascading light of flashing moments. To expose, to stop, and to fix: the vulnerable image as an each-other, a fleeting us. How do we hold the intangible with sensitivity, without knowing if it will keep?

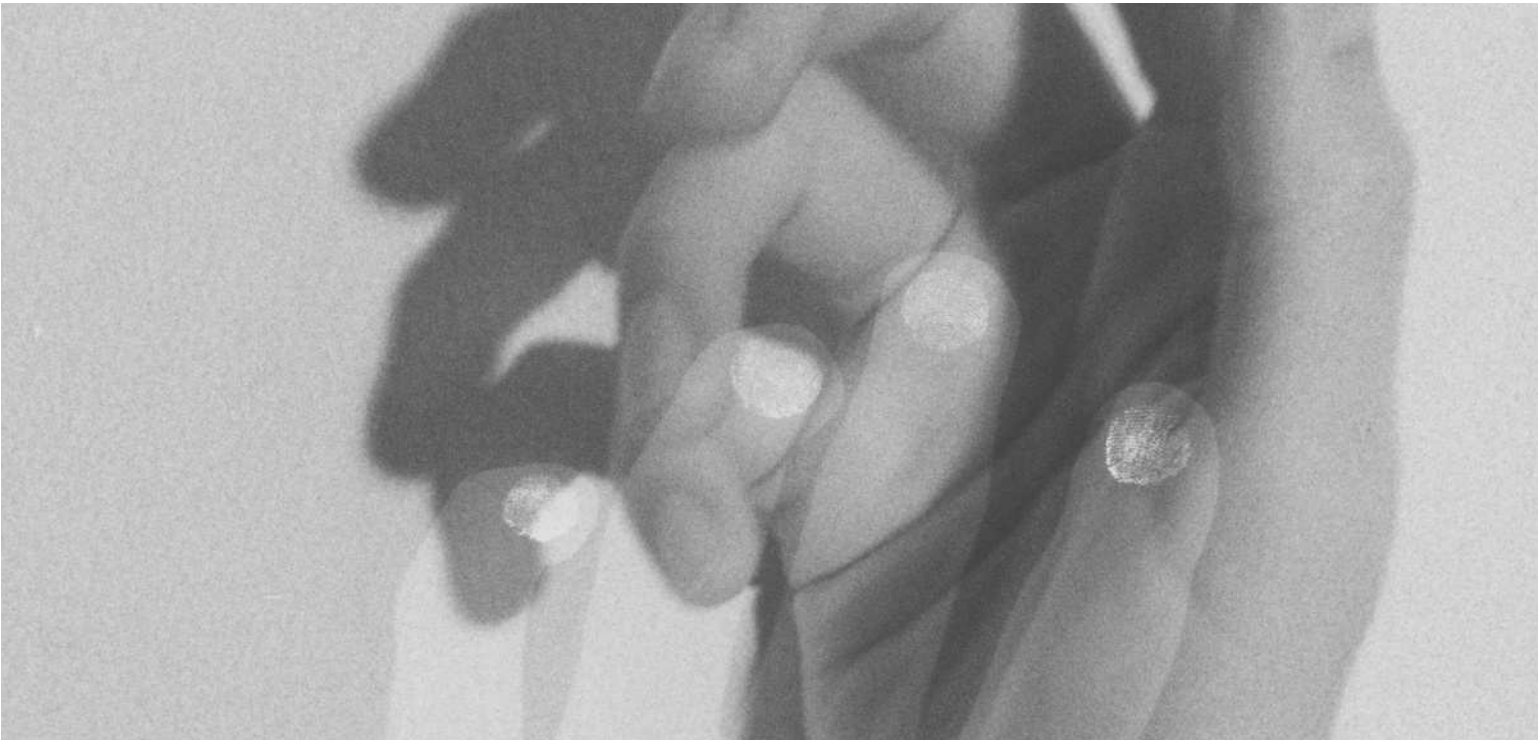

figments, 2025

imprinted image, 3 pieces of photographic paper
each 28.3 x 38.7 cm

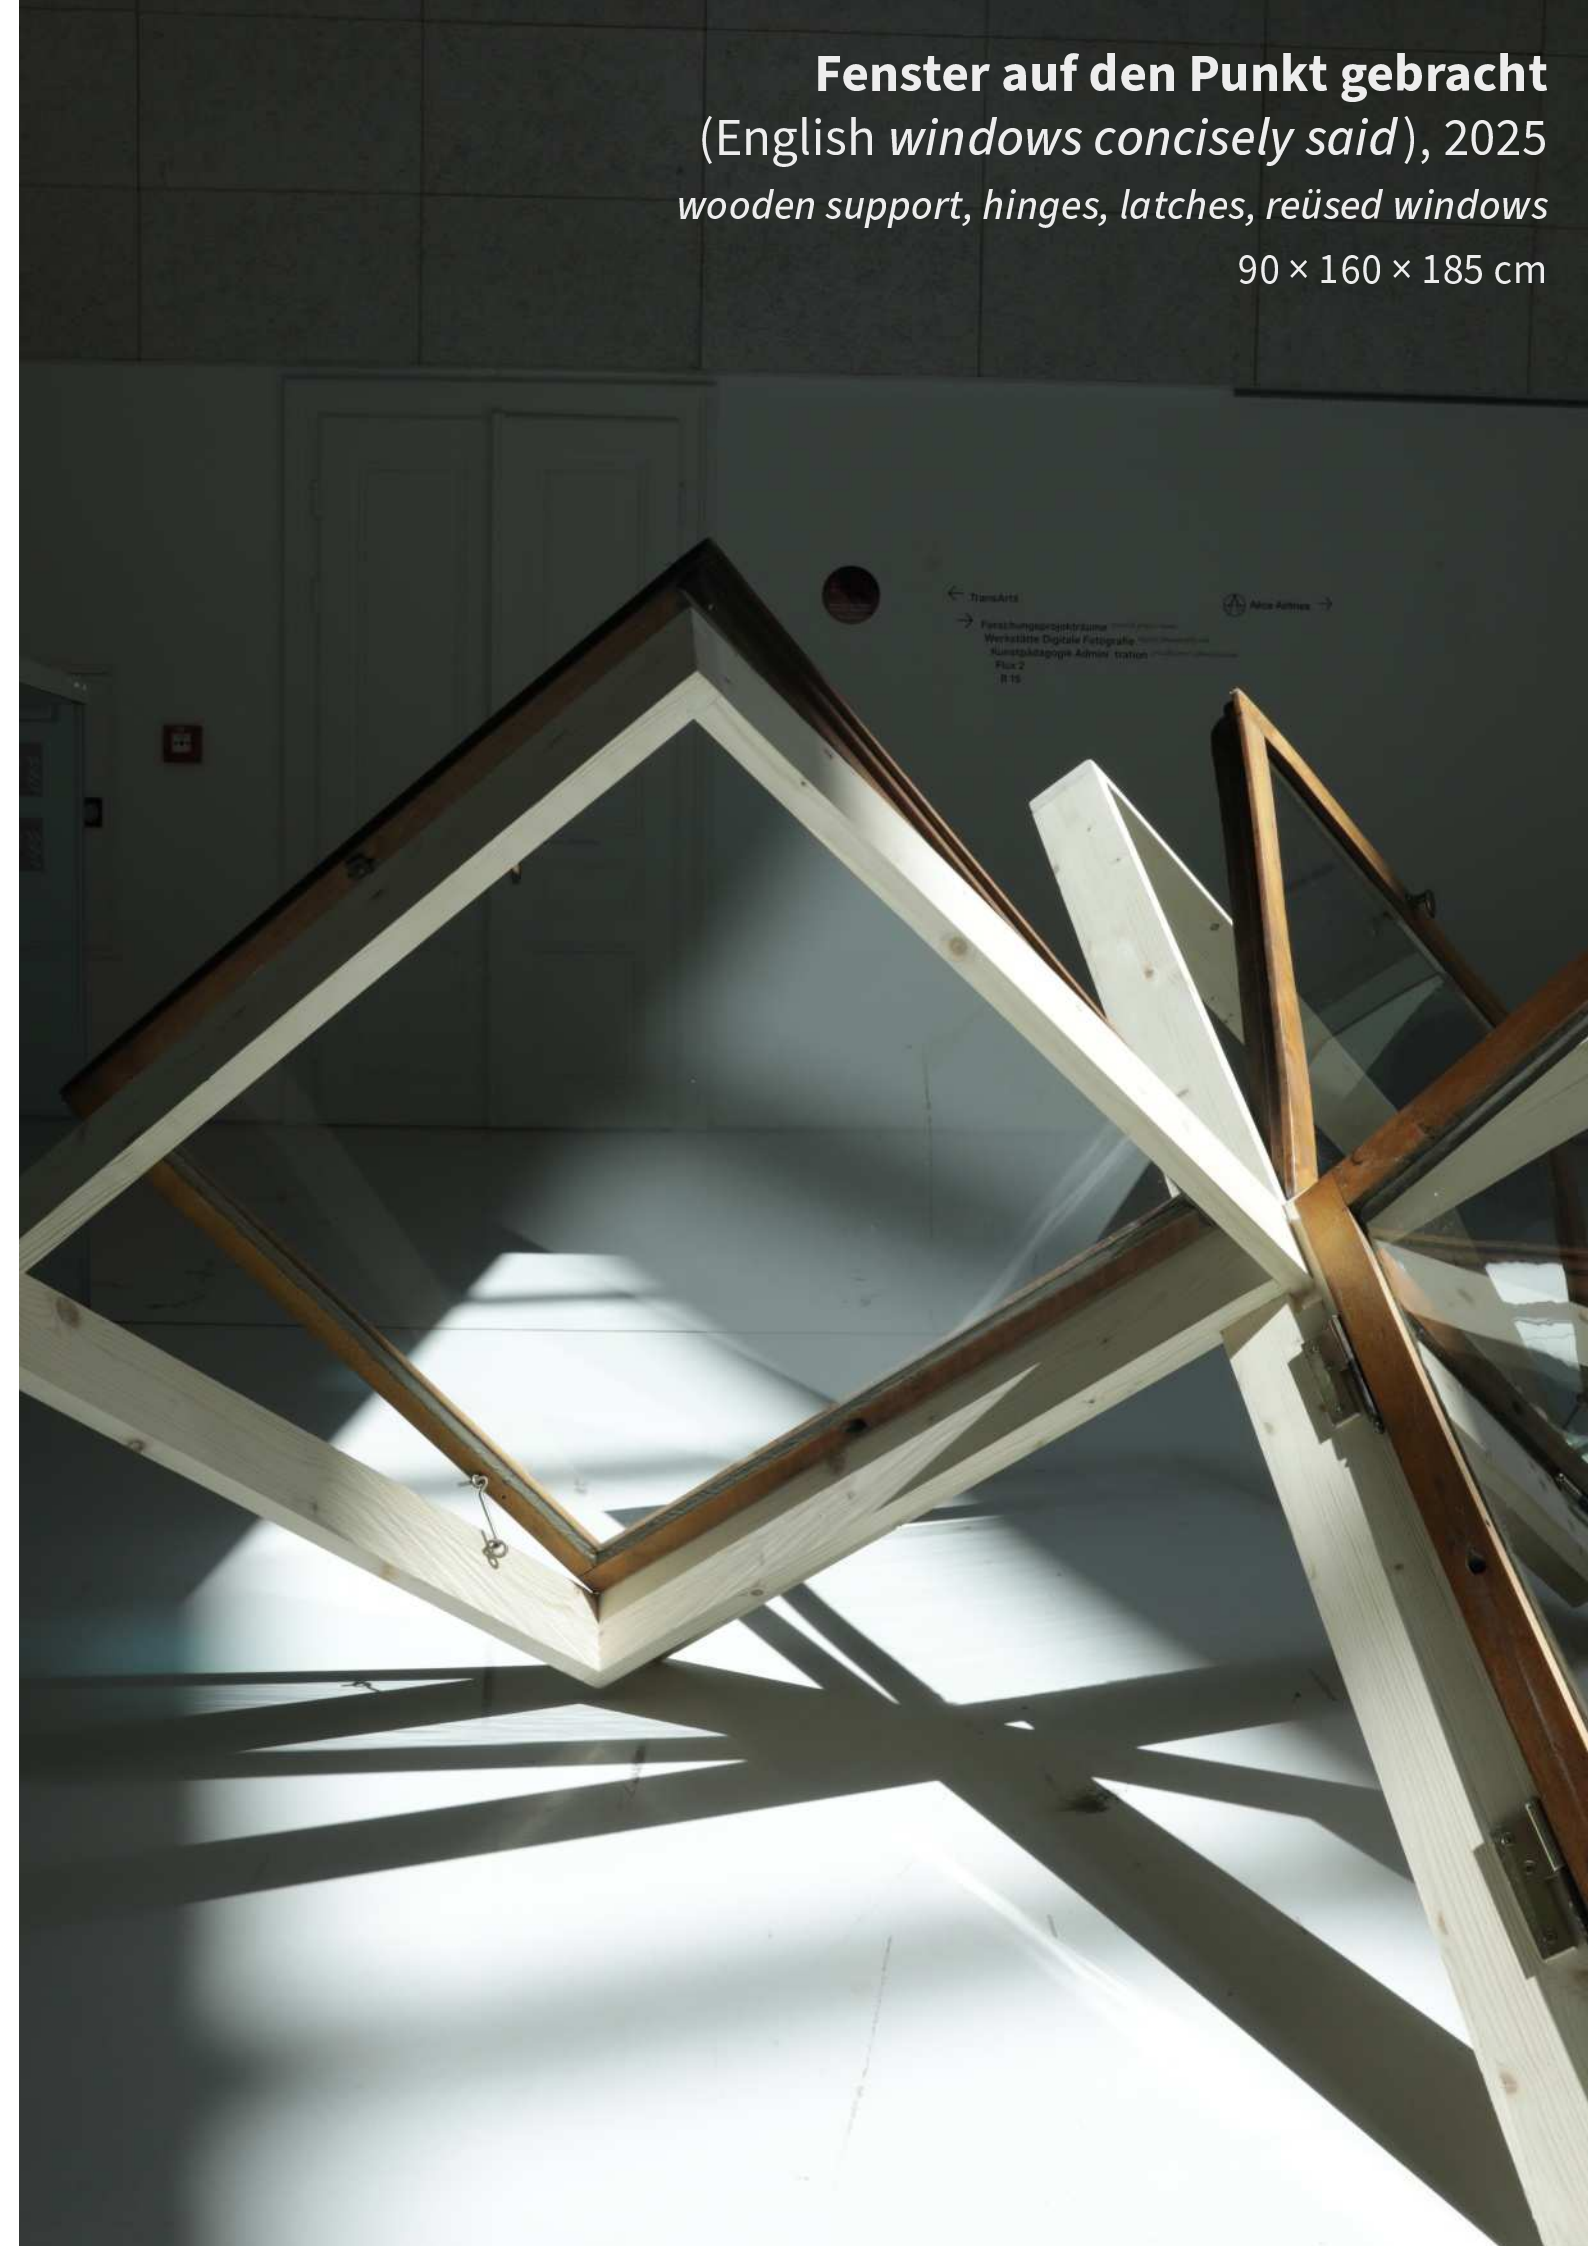

The body indexes with a captured moment, projecting onto memory in another form.

An analog image comes to be through sensitivity and vulnerability in ways that the digital inherently tries to circumvent: the sensitive film, the tactful development, the vulnerable image. This physicality of the analog process retains a poignancy that escapes digital expression.

The exit signs and the windows were salvaged by materialnomaden from old buildings in Vienna.

Fenster auf den Punkt gebracht

(English windows concisely said), 2025

wooden support, hinges, latches, reused windows

90 × 160 × 185 cm

A collection of two objects with threefold symmetry and chirality. The threefold wooden supports carry triplets of reused building materials that were once used to delineate boundary, placed about a single point on three mutually-perpendicular planes.

am Du (English upon you), 2024

ink, paper

each 26.5 x 39 cm

A hand is pushed up through layers of abstraction, from an analog photo to a digitalized image, and then pulled back down into the tangible as an etching into a copper plate for intaglio printing.

We find our selves at our boundaries, at the imperfect interface to others, muddled by memory of the lost and piqued by presence of the found. In this way, we become through flows between the concrete and abstract. These translations and transfigurations aim towards the comfort or stability of self, but are innately full of conversion and, ultimately, loss.

dorthin (English over there), 2024

wood

each $14.9 \times 12.5 \times 550$ cm

installed as part of these tires are made for walking, the TransArts contribution to the Klima Biennale Wien 2024, Nordwestbahnhof, Vienna, Austria (6.4. – 14.7.24)

Train tracks made of wood are planted askew into the ground. Directed toward the sky that they will never reach, their stunted lengths contrast the concept of the limitless potential of growth. A symbol of quick socioeconomic expansion and growth finds its finiteness against the slowly expanding and growing of a living tree.

dorthin (English over there), 2024

wood

each $14.9 \times 12.5 \times 550$ cm

Part of the work involved the performative transport by foot of the train tracks to the location for installation, and then a solo performative transport by train for a short train track.

BEGEGNET (English ENCOUNTERED), 2024

rust, cotton

each 24 × 33 cm

exhibited in a group exhibition What makes you laugh, what makes you cry?, Hollerei Galerie, Vienna, Austria

(16.9. – 3.11.25)

A steel plate repeatedly encounters wet cotton fabric. These encounters leave traces on the fabric, while the plate is steadily changed. Memories bring about a self that is in turn formed by its stories: the subject and the lost object. It is the process of being as the mediation between affect and effect.

affect, 2024

copper and steel wire, crocheted cotton, acid, salt, wooden frame, two L-shaped nails

40 × 30 × 2 cm

The cotton support is the interface of exposed materials, made vulnerable by contact with acid and salt.

We give to be received. We support to be held. We shape to be formed. Relationships take from each to make an us: bodies as actor and acted upon, and time as staining residues and changing substances.

Circumcluded, 2022

cotton, copper, wooden hoop, patina
15 × 22 × 1 cm

Relationship as a coming together of material: the receptive nature of the cotton support becomes the relay of the interaction, taking up the patina of the copper, while inverting the act of penetration unto passivity.

alien self, 2022

mirror, faucet, soap, soap dish, towel, filth

variable size

exhibited in the group show Hast du Lust?, Improper Walls, Vienna, Austria (25.5. – 24.6.22)

How much of how we see ourselves is how others have seen us?
Should we cleanse ourselves of others, so that we may be ourselves?

»alien self« is about that part of ourselves from which we cower, that we have made foreign because of the dirtied mirror from which we learned to view ourselves. It is about how intimacy starts in subtler, filthier ways of self: to look up at the mirror in dirtying doubt, while the soap itself is filth and the hand towel is shamefully lost to the floor. Do it again.

installed as Thresholds: tacit, 2nd Floor space of the TransArts Class at the Angewandte Wien (VZA7), Vienna, Austria (16. – 30.6.25)

The boundaries to the digital have become ever more blurred. In those novel spaces it has created for us, the digital has also begun to reach into the definitions of our selves and into imaginations of our identities: as we consume it, the digital consumes us. However, it holds us in ways that we can never hold it back.

A CCTV camera is set up in the hallway, connected to a display behind a physical privacy screen, with a delayed video feed. What you see is not what is, but it is what was. The installation is an invitation to be held for a little while: to watch, to be watched, to be stored, to be displayed, and to be released into digital ether.

This installation is a meditation on formative structures, processes that form and of being formed, through material vulnerability and mutability. The pieces are reflections on effect and affect, on manipulating and yielding, on giving and taking space. As the objects experience each other, the viewers are melded into empathy with them through the heat and humidity of the room.

Vulnerable Embrace, 2022

doors, balloon, doorstops, needle, sign

installed at 2nd Floor space of the TransArts Class at the Angewandte Wien (VZA7), Vienna, Austria (8.11.22 – 6.2.23)

As people, we come to be in the intersection of social spaces and through the interplay of personal boundaries. Our selves find their place through the intermingling of vulnerability and trust. How do we navigate those confrontations, both alone and collectively?

A balloon finds itself in the embrace of a pair of doors. It proposes the act of sitting with unease, to engage with hope, while asking what it means to be vulnerable as a dimension of self.

230 × 200 × 110 cm

Naïveté, 2021

pinwheel, ventilation ducts, breath of the WUK

230 × 200 × 110 cm

installed in the Kunstzelle at the WUK Vienna, Austria (18.3 – 12.6.21)

The singular pinwheel spins without respite, as the exhaust of the WUK's ventilation system is pumped into the Kunstzelle. The pinwheel is affected by the outside, but it channels that into being as it can, in the only way it can: it spins, relentlessly.

The installation is about how naïveté creates an imperfect bubble of unknowing: it conveys hope, yet also the burden of being affected.

In a time of uncertainty and disrupted milieu, it is a reflection on feelings of isolation and coping. It is about finding a space to exist under outside pressures and restrictions, and how unceasing situations can make even typical behaviors seem wearying.
